

Testimonial from AIIMS Jodhpur

ILBS-ECHO Program

There has been a very rapid advances in all field of ever changing medical profession. Only way to keep abreast with the changes is looking at resources or involvement in Continuing Medical Education. The former is time consuming and hence CME provides the best opportunity for learning. However, it involves time and money to attend CME. Online or web based CME provide optimal value and is cost-effective. ILBS New Delhi has taken a wonderful initiative of embarking on teaching program for hepatobiliary and gastro-intestinal conditions.

It is our privilege to be associated with ILBS-ECHO program. AIIMS Jodhpur is a developing Institute and though small in number of faculty but they are ever ready to learn newer techniques and skills. The program is being attended by faculty and residents from Pediatrics, Medicine, Transfusion Medicine, OBG, Nephrology, Microbiology and Pathology.

The Audio video reception at our end is exceptionally good and barring few moments there was uninterrupted streaming.

We found the program very useful academically since there is direct face to face contact between speaker and participants. Using case based strategy is considered useful by our faculty and residents. Though we don't have faculty from Gastro-medicine, we do get patient with involvement of hepatobiliary system and hope to contribute more such challenging cases in our future meetings.

Wishing you all success in the program,
